In our time, even making a small decision to help ourselves, might even help others.

We ask someone to help us but on the other hand we often to help them too. Sometimes when we make decisions to help others in their hard times, we help ourselves too.

Rebecca made an abrupt decision to ask another pregnant lady's help for raising her child. She quickly wrote down her phone number on the lady's hand.

She might have thought that this was not a good way to ask for baby-sitting, it wouldn't work, but at last. Weeks later more than ten families were participating.
in that "family program". It helped Rebecca to get close to her neighborhood.
She learned how to take care of children.
This decision helped her to stay out
of being alone and live a crowded life.
Her life became easier because since she was living in an urban setting. They exchanged tips about how to raise children. As the reading said, Rebecca became more connected to her neighborhood instead of being isolated.
Personally, I didn't have any these kinds of situations. Every person has their own hard times. It is pretty tough to make a decision that everyone might be influenced by it. My only worry is if I could help the high school segregation between the students of different ethnic groups. In the future, I would go to my high school and gather all the teachers, at least one from each ethnic group, to a meeting. I would organize to have dancing classes from every culture. I would make this classes requirement for high school graduation. I would have each teacher from another culture teach their dance and make the students do it. Since high school students want everything to be fun in high school, I hope...
This decision will help both have fun time and understand each other's cultures better. I think this way students would get along; music makes people come together.

The author suggests that we take Rebecca's story and apply it in our time.

True, I think the major issue nowadays is teachers not understanding students.

Again going back to school is that students can do whatever they want. It's probably out of wanting attention or not being raised well. If a teacher can sit with a student and ask them what... is the reason for their delinquent actions or violence in a parental way, students might confess. Didn’t it said that teachers are our parents in school. If we try to make even small but right decisions, we might not notice, but it might help both us and people who surround us. We might take Rebecca’s story and apply it to our community today. We must apply it to schools and try to help vanish the segregation in high schools.

Present critical of the understanding at school, continue on with the writer's story.
